The President, with the different members of the Cabinet, as is enstowary during the last hours of the accessor of Congress, was at the Capital this morning ready to sign such bills as he approved. As your correspondent entered the luxurious apartment set apart for the exclusive use of the President of the United States upon his visit to the Capital, the Chief Magnitrate was reated alone upon a sofa, the members of the Cabinet awaiting his directions at adiatance. HIS LAST SUNDAY MORNING TALK

In Which He Revives old Memories and Gives Expression to his Thoughts Upon Various Matters of Interest. The following dispatch was talegraphed to alone upon a sofa, the members of the Cabinet awaiting his directions at adistance. Little would it have been supposed that within the brief space of sixty minutes the public careet temperarity, it may be prophetically said, of this eminent soldier and citizon, would be at an end. He seemed engaged, as was always his wont, in profound meditation when alone, perhaps reviewing it retrospect the eventual period of his career just closing. In sympathy with this was your correspondent, for it was fitten years ago, as a correspondent of the New York Hereld, that he first mot and entered upon agreeable relations of friendship with this distinguished citizon, then serving his country upon the distant fields of Western Twanessee, leading the army of the Union from conquest to conquest. To-day, there in the mighty pile of the Capitol, surrounded by his Ministers of Siate, and upon the eve of his eivite administration, it was but natural that there should be some thought of the past, and indeed a mutual bond of sympathy. The President said that even the now few and fleeting moments still left of his public services seemed to more with laggard pace, and that he was impatiently awaiting the last moment now near at hand, so as to enjoy once more the pleasures and immunities of an humble citizen of the Republic, freed from the cares of State, and undisturbed by the importunities of men and the Republic, freed from the cares of State, and undisturbed by the importunities of men and the exactions of politics. In reverting to the past eight years of his exercise of the Executive functions of the Government, he well said that the questions upon which he most rested the plan of his administration in history were well known, and had aireauy stood the test practiced. When he entered the Previdential office he said he found the condition of things most unsatisfactory. The public finances were in a most unsatisfactory condition, the animosidies which had been engendered in the war, and under the influences attending the subsequent administration of the Southern States were still alive, the relations between the United States and Great Britain were of an extremely delicate character, growing between the United States and Great Britain were of an extremely delicate character, growing out of the depredations of British craisers, and between Spain and the United States of an equally serious nature, on account of the disturbed situation in Cuba. The Indian question was! provoking much dissatisfaction, and indeed, in almost every brach of the Executive there was more or less to be done to secure to the Government that efficiency of administration and exercise of power which was necessary to its authority and success at home, and respect and influence abroad. Upon these general features President Grant loangurates the policy of his administration. In taking a retrospect of the

succeeded in effecting a reduction of hundreds of millions of the public indebtefeness, and had at the same time accomplished mil-lions of reduction in the annual burden of tanation, and now, as his administra-tion was about to close, he had the satisfaction of seeing the credit of the United States second to no nation in the world, their bonds in demand, kind of violence against the rights of every citizen within the Southern borders. In this he admitted that there was still much to be done. He felt that there was still much to be done. He felt that there was still much to be done. He felt that there was still much to be done. He felt that there was still perpetuate the state of feeling which has existed in the South, but that he could see even now, in the near future, where counseis prevailing in the Southern States than had had the ascendancy during his administration. This was ovidenced, he thought, in the action of the Southern Democrate of weight and indunce in the disposition of the Presidential question. On the subject of the foreign relations of the United States, he said that his first action towards the settlement of the Alabamas question was suggested by his faith in Sir Edward Thornton, who always exhibited a desire to adjust the differences existing between the two Governments, in which also Secretary Fish and the English Government hearily joined. The result of their efforts has since become a matter of history. In regard to Spain there was, he add, a great pressure to secure the recognition of Cuban independence, but he wished to avoid a war as Spain was well prepared, and it would be no glory ascept in the triumph of our arms, and he did not believe in war for glory, but for principle. In regard to the Mexican border transless, the President said that he was always disposed to not the part of leathery with them, as the Mexican those the part of leathery with them, as the Mexican those the part of leathery with them, as the Mexican the what is a pretext for war was concerned, the President said that it would ultimately succeed, and would ultimately bring about a breaking up of the tribal relations, and would make the red man as responsible as the white man.
